Petrified Forest National Park allows the use of electric bikes in park

Beginning Oct. 1, 2019, Petrified Forest National Park allows the use of electric bikes (e-bikes) where traditional bicycles are allowed. An e-bike is a two- or three-wheeled cycle with fully operable pedals and an electric motor of less than 750 watts (1 h.p.) that provides propulsion assistance. The National Park Service recognizes that e-bikes support a healthy park experience that is accessible, desirable, and relatable to people of all abilities, and by minimizing human impact through the expansion of active transportation options in parks. E-bikes are prohibited where traditional bicycles are prohibited. Except where use of motor vehicles by the public is allowed, using the electric motor to move an e-bike without pedaling is prohibited. There are no charging stations in the parks. Generators are not allowed in the backcountry. So bring your charged e-bike and explore the wide open spaces of the Petrified Forest National Park.

“Weaving through Time” art exhibit at Phoenix Sky Harbor Airport honors the Grand Canyon Centennial

Although the history of the Grand Canyon as a national park spans only 100 years, the Canyon is deeply entwined in a broader story of Indigenous people that have lived in the area for thousands of years. The Grand Canyon is significant to eleven Native American tribes. In celebration of Grand Canyon National Park’s centennial, the “Weaving through Time” art exhibition at the Phoenix Sky Harbor International Airport features objects created by people that have called the canyon home. On display are Havasupai basketry crafted for everyday use or trade as well as ancient split-twig animal figurines. Using local plant fiber materials, people living in the Grand Canyon have been weaving through time. The exhibit is located on the third level of Terminal 3 and will close on March 8, 2020.

Future campground improvements include adding ramada structures with more grills, fire rings and picnic tables, as well as a new amphitheater.
